

Regarding changing of the FCC "no call" provisions to allow bankers to call customers for up to 30 days after closing an account.

This is the "nose of the camel under the tent". Please for our sake (and hopefully for yours) do not revise the no-call rules. To do so at this time sends two messages: One, to consumers that the FCC is willing to water-down provisions of the no-call rule now that the public outcry has died down some. Two, to industry "advocacy" groups that the FCC is willing to make trivial exceptions to the rule, opening the door to a flood of other requests. Please... keep that door closed! They (the telemarketers) extraordinarily abused the public right to privacy (and sanity) and do not deserve piecemeal exceptions at this time.
